

Problem Statement

- The government doesn't do a lot to prevent gun violence, causing many teens who shouldn't have access to guns result in gun violence.

Who is experiencing this problem?

- Everyone, including children, are experiencing this problem because more kids are experiencing school shootings than the norm.

What is the problem?

- The problem is that more kids are having access to guns regardless of their ages because their parents are giving it to them. The government isn't doing enough to prevent these kids from getting guns which results in violence and more school shootings in the U.S.

Where does the problem present itself?

- The problem can present itself in big settings like school because kids are bringing the guns with them and it's a matter of time before a mass shooting starts. For example, kids are not being checked for weapons and it's easy for them to carry weapons with them without an issue, putting adults and children in danger.

Why does it matter?

- The problem matters because kids under the age of 21 shouldn't have a gun registered to them because they're not mature enough to carry them. School shootings have been on the rise for years and this shouldn't be the new normal for kids. The government needs to do more to prevent guns from getting into the hands of kids.
